

What to call the dream cottage?

WE ALL know how difficult it is to buy a house. Anyone who has shared the soul-destroying ordeal of waiting patiently for the latest edition of the local paper to find out what's new on the property page and then discovers that the dream house was sold yesterday or the price has doubled overnight, will feel a pang everytime the subject is mentioned.

After weeks of soul destroying search I have netted (for a price too frightening to disclose) a tiny white terraced cottage with just room enough in it to swing a mouse. I have now hit an even more serious snag: what on earth do I call it?

The previous owners named it simply "the cottage." But that scarcely does it justice. It's like having a cat and calling it "Cat" or an orang utang and calling it "Orang utang."

What I want is something distinctive, something splendid, which lifts it above all the other cottages in the row yet retains its essential cottageness.

There are already four Shangri Las, two Bide-a-wees and twenty-three Chez Nouses in the same village so I have to rule them out. But I could try the little trick, which some people use of uniting their christian names to create the name of their house. This is fine when Bill and Winifred call their Billwin and Len and Mavis christen their palace Mavlen. But what do you do with Alison and Richard? Alichard could well be an improper suggestion and "Isonrich" sounds ungrammatical.

Our contributor has bought his cottage—achievement enough as many might think in these gazumping days. He now worries about a name.

* * *

The word "cottage" can be given a measure of grandeur if used to describe a celebrated seat of learning such as University Cottage, Caius Cottage or just the Cottage of Art and Technicology.

Transposing the adjective, too, might lend elegance to the name, as in Cottage Apple Tree, Cottage Ivy, Cottage Pie or Cottage Cheese.

Many people are fortunate because their house has some unusual characteristic to aid its nomenclature, such as Gables, thatch or a Mansard roof but my little cottage has none of these and to call it by what it does have — the bedroom window, the front door or the bathroom would only confuse the postman.

Others are able to name their house after some natural feature such as the Limes, Tall Trees or Mountain View but the cottage is sadly lacking in such attributes. The garden boasts stinging nettles ten feet high and I understand that there awaits the pioneer who first reaches the far end some of the most succulent rhubarb in Norfolk. Alas, Stinging Nettle Shanty and Rhubarb Repos just do not have the right ring and Council Estate View lacks the romance for which my heart cries out.

When all else fails inspiration can sometimes come from a large scale map of the area. This has revealed that a Stone Axehead was found nearby in 1927, that in the village itself is a Hydraulic Ram (something to do with sheep, presumably) and just outside are the remains of a Roman Villa. But again I have to reject Hydraulic Ram Hovel (too humble) Roman Villa II (too pretentious) and 1927 Stone Axehead Cottage (too trendy).

* * *

If I omit the word "cottage" a whole new world is opened up, especially as I am sure there is no law against borrowing someone else's house name. So, to call it The White House will probably not cause a diplomatic incident with the U.S.A. Nor, I expect, will her Majesty order it to be demolished just because I call it Buckingham Palace number 4 Side Street. But Number 10 Downing Street might encourage demonstrations and wrongly delivered letters.

Famous people provide a fertile source of names. Sir Alex Douglas-Home, Mary Whitehouse and Barbara Castle would all look impressive suitably embossed in old fashioned type on my letter heading.

You have only to work at the Post Office at Christmas or look at the little plaques on garden gates to know the lengths to which people go to name their houses. Almost any street will be a symphony of birth places, mementoes of happy holidays or wartime battles, flowers, saints, precious stones and foreign phrases wrongly spelt. Seldom do the names appear to bear any relation to the house or its inhabitants.

But why does naming a house call for such resourcefulness or obscurity? Is it because we are all a little afraid that unless we call it "Grigoriopol" or "Tiruchivapalli" our castle will be seen for what it really is — a square box with a lid on it?

Maybe that's why our current favourite is Latitad. It would take another thousand words to describe the obscure process of anti logic which led to the choice of that name.

Richard Barr

THE WEATHER

General—Nearly all parts will have a dry day. Temperatures will be below normal.

East Anglia — Rather cloudy but some sunny spells developing. Wind north-easterly, light or moderate. Rather cold, maximum 15 C. (59 F.).

North Sea — Wind north-easterly, moderate or fresh, fair. Visibility moderate or good. Sea moderate.

Outlook — Dry with sunny periods in most places but Eastern England may have some scattered showers. Rather cold in the east.

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS AT MORLEY (Taken at 10 a.m. B.S.T.)

1972	Thermometer
	Bar.	Max.	Min.	Grass	Sun	Rain
Sept. 22	30.27	19.2	7.1	4.6	4.6	0.0
	(1025)
Sept. 23	30.24	16.6	5.5	4.9	0.1	0.0
	(1024)
Sept. 24	30.21	—	8.0	3.9	—	—
	(1023)
Rainfall for month to date						40.5
Mean rainfall for Sept.						57.2
J. G. HILTON, Observer, Norfolk Agricultural Station.

SUN RISES 6.45 a.m. SETS 6.47 p.m.
MOON RISES 7.16 p.m. SETS 11.40 a.m.

Last Quarter — Sept 29th
Rises 10.39 p.m.

Sets 3.48 p.m. (30th)
New Moon — Oct. 7th
Rises 7.29 a.m.

Sets 5.52 p.m.
First Quarter — Oct. 15th
Rises 3.03 p.m.

Sets 11.25 p.m.
Full Moon — Oct. 22nd
Rises 7.37 a.m.

HIGH WATER

	a.m.	p.m.
Gorleston	10.53	11.31
Lowestoft	11.28	—
Southwold	12.02	12.03
King's Lynn	8.19	8.52
Cromer and Sheringham	8.39	9.12

(Tidal predictions copyright reserved)

Forthcoming marriages

MR. M. E. LACEY and MISS S. A. WADSWLEY

The engagement is announced between Michael, only son of Mrs. P. C. Lacey and the late Mr. E. C. Lacey, of Walnut Tree Farm, Little Melton, and Shirley, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. R. Wadswley, of White House Farm, East Carleton.

MR. S. R. W. HOWLETT and MISS P. S. LEVESLEY

The engagement is announced between Pauline, elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Levesley, of Old Catton, Norwich, and Stephen, younger son of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Howlett, of Yelverton, Norwich.

To give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death,
to guide our feet into the way of peace.

—Luke i. 79.

UNDER STONES

threads of red seaweed, young edible crabs, some of which were pure white, long-clawed little porcelain crabs and some hermit crabs in borrowed shells.

Along the lowest zone of the shore almost every boulder hid at least one greenish zebra-striped squat lobster, quick to scuttle backwards when exposed or to nip an intruding hand instantly with its scorpion-like pincers.

In the same area we came upon the oddest "find" of the afternoon: a large black "boot-lace-worm," all bunched up in knots. Although soft and limp like a seaweed when picked up, it made slow creeping movements, which showed that it was alive.

We could not gauge its full length, but at a guess it may well have been a yard long, which is only one-sixth of the stretch of a full-grown specimen of this well-named Lineus longissimus,

Eastern Daily Press

Norwich, Monday, September 25, 1972

Telephone: Norwich 28311

ANGUISH OF A MAN OF PROPERTY

What to call the dream cottage?

WE ALL know how difficult it is to buy a house. Anyone who has shared the soul-destroying ordeal of waiting patiently for the latest edition of the local paper to find out what's new on the property page and then discovers that the dream house was sold yesterday or the price has doubled overnight, will feel a pang everytime the subject is mentioned.

After weeks of soul destroying search I have netted (for a price too frightening to disclose) a tiny white terraced cottage with just room enough in it to swing a mouse. I have now hit an even more serious snag: what on earth do I call it?

The previous owners named it simply "the cottage." But that scarcely does it justice. It's like having a cat and calling it "Cat" or an orang utang and calling it "Orang utang."

What I want is something distinctive, something splendid, which lifts it above all the other cottages in the row yet retains its essential cottageness.

There are already four Shangri Las, two Bide-a-wees and twenty-three Chez Nouses in the same village so I have to rule them out. But I could try the little trick, which some people use of uniting their christian names to create the name of their house. This is fine when Bill and Winifred call theirs Billwin and Len and Mavis christen their palace Mavlen. But what do you do with Alison and Richard? Alichard could well be an improper suggestion and "Isonrich" sounds ungrammatical.

* * *
The word "cottage" can be given a measure of grandeur if used to describe a celebrated seat of learning such as University Cottage, Caius Cottage or just the Cottage of Art and Technicology.

Transposing the adjective, too, might lend elegance to the name, as in Cottage Apple Tree, Cottage Ivy, Cottage Pie or Cottage Cheese.

Many people are fortunate because their house has some unusual characteristic to aid its nomenclature, such as Gables, thatch or a Mansard roof but my little cottage has none of these and to call it by what it does have — the bedroom window, the front door or the bathroom would only confuse the postman.

Others are able to name their house after some natural feature such as the Limes, Tall Trees or Mountain View but the cottage is sadly lacking in such attributes. The garden boasts stinging nettles ten feet high and I understand that there awaits the pioneer who first reaches the far end some of the most succulent rhubarb in Norfolk. Alas, Stinging Nettle Shanty and Rhubarb Repos just do not have the right ring and Council Estate View lacks the romance for which my heart cries out.

When all else fails inspiration can sometimes come from a large scale map of the area. This has revealed that a Stone Axehead was found nearby in 1927, that in the village itself is a Hydraulic Ram (something to do with sheep, presumably) and just outside are the remains of a Roman Villa. But again I have to reject Hydraulic Ram Hovel (too humble) Roman Villa II (too pretentious) and 1927 Stone Axehead Cottage (too trendy).

* * *
If I omit the word "cottage" a whole new world is opened up, especially as I am sure there is no law against borrowing someone else's house name. So, to call it The White House will probably not cause a diplomatic incident with the U.S.A. Nor, I expect, will her Majesty order it to be demolished just because I call it Buckingham Palace number 4 Side Street. But Number 10 Downing Street might encourage demonstrations and wrongly delivered letters.

Our contributor has bought his cottage—achievement enough as many might think in these gazumping days. He now worries about a name.

Famous people provide a fertile source of names. Sir Alex Douglas-Home, Mary Whitehouse and Barbara Castle would all look impressive suitably embossed in old fashioned type on my letter heading.

You have only to work at the Post Office at Christmas or look at the little plaques on garden gates to know the lengths to which people go to name their houses. Almost any street will be a symphony of birth places, mementoes of happy holidays or wartime battles, flowers, saints, precious stones and foreign phrases wrongly spelt. Seldom do the names appear to bear any relation to the house or its inhabitants.

But why does naming a house call for such resourcefulness or obscurity? Is it because we are all a little afraid that unless we call it "Grigoriopol" or "Tiruchivapalli" our castle will be seen for what it really is — a square box with a lid on it?

Maybe that's why our current favourite is Latitat. It would take another thousand words to describe the obscure process of anti logic which led to the choice of that name.

Richard Barr

What to call the dream cottage?

Our contributor has bought his cottage—achievement enough as many might think in these gazing days. He now worries about a name.

WE ALL know how difficult it is to buy a house. Anyone who has shared the soul-destroying ordeal of waiting patiently for the latest edition of the local paper to find out what's new on the property page and then discovers that the dream house was sold yesterday or the price has doubled overnight, will feel a pang everytime the subject is mentioned.

After weeks of soul destroying search I have netted (for a price too frightening to disclose) a tiny white terraced cottage with just room enough in it to swing a mouse. I have now hit an even more serious snag: what on earth do I call it?

The previous owners named it simply "the cottage." But that scarcely does it justice. It's like having a cat and calling it "Cat" or an orang utang and calling it "Orang utang."

What I want is something distinctive, something splendid, which lifts it above all the other cottages in the row yet retains its essential cottageness.

There are already four Shangri Las, two Bide-a-wees and twenty-three Chez Nouses in the same village so I have to rule them out. But I could try the little trick, which some people use of uniting their christian names to create the name of their house. This is fine when Bill and Winifred call theirs Billwin and Len and Mavis christen their palace Mavlen. But what do you do with Alison and Richard? Alichard could well be an improper suggestion and "Isonrich" sounds ungrammatical.

* * *

The word "cottage" can be given a measure of grandeur if used to describe a celebrated seat of learning such as University Cottage, Caius Cottage or just the Cottage of Art and Technicology.

Transposing the adjective, too, might lend elegance to the name, as in Cottage Apple Tree, Cottage Ivy, Cottage Pie or Cottage Cheese.

Many people are fortunate because their house has some unusual characteristic to aid its nomenclature, such as Gables, thatch or a Mansard roof but my little cottage has none of these and to call it by what it does have — the bedroom window, the front door or the bathroom would only confuse the postman.

Others are able to name their house after some natural feature such as the Limes, Tall Trees or Mountain View but the cottage is sadly lacking in such attributes. The garden boasts stinging nettles ten feet high and I understand that there awaits the pioneer who first reaches the far end some of the most succulent rhubarb in Norfolk. Alas, Stinging Nettle Shanty and Rhubarb Repos just do not have the right ring and Council Estate View lacks the romance for which my heart cries out.

When all else fails inspiration can sometimes come from a large scale map of the area. This has revealed that a Stone Axehead was found nearby in 1927, that in the village itself is a Hydraulic Ram (something to do with sheep, presumably) and just outside are the remains of a Roman Villa. But again I have to reject Hydraulic Ram Hovel (too humble) Roman Villa II (too pretentious) and 1927 Stone Axehead Cottage (too trendy).

* * *

If I omit the word "cottage" a whole new world is opened up, especially as I am sure there is no law against borrowing someone else's house name. So, to call it The White House will probably not cause a diplomatic incident with the U.S.A. Nor, I expect, will her Majesty order it to be demolished just because I call it Buckingham Palace number 4 Side Street. But Number 10 Downing Street might encourage demonstrations and wrongly delivered letters.

Famous people provide a fertile source of names. Sir Alex Douglas-Home, Mary Whitehouse and Barbara Castle would all look impressive suitably embossed in old fashioned type on my letter heading.

You have only to work at the Post Office at Christmas or look at the little plaques on garden gates to know the lengths to which people go to name their houses. Almost any street will be a symphony of birth places, mementoes of happy holidays or wartime battles, flowers, saints, precious stones and foreign phrases wrongly spelt. Seldom do the names appear to bear any relation to the house or its inhabitants.

But why does naming a house call for such resourcefulness or obscurity? Is it because we are all a little afraid that unless we call it "Grigoriopol" or "Tiruchivapalli" our castle will be seen for what it really is — a square box with a lid on it?

Maybe that's why our current favourite is Latitat. It would take another thousand words to describe the obscure process of anti logic which led to the choice of that name.

Richard Barr

G
L
S
R
C